Can a patent be granted on the basis of provisional specification?
No, a complete specification must be filed within 12 months of filing the provisional specification. The Patent Office will not examine the provisional specification for grant of patents.

What is the timeline of patent filing and prosecution in India?
If we assume zero time as filing of the provisional patent application. Then within 12 months from the filing of the provisional specification, the complete specification has to be filed. The provisional application drafting can be done by applicant himself/herself. However, for complete specification, it is suggested to take the help of a patent expert. After this, the next stage is the publication of the patent. Automatically, at the end of 18 months the patent will be published. The meaning of the publication is that the patent bibliographic information, abstract, number of claims and number of drawings will be published in the Gazette. The Gazette is updated every Friday. The next stage is Requests for Patent Examination. The normal Requests for Patent Examination can be filed within a period of 48 months from the priority date. If the patent examination request is not filed within the specified time limit the patent application shall be treated as withdrawn by the Indian Patent Office. It is mandatory under Indian Patent Act 1970, to file a request for patent examination as per the prescribed timeline. The request for examination can be filed along with the patent complete specification filing. The date of filing of the request for examination determines your number in the queue of all patents that have requested examination. Once the patent application is examined, the Patent office issues an examination report to the patent applicant which is generally known as First Examination Report (FER). The Applicant should reply the objections (if any) and place the application in order for grant within 6 months from the date of issue of the FER (First Examination Report) (can be extended by 3 months through request filing). In this case too, if the reply to the examination report is not made within prescribed time limit, the application is deemed to be abandoned. If you filed the examination request along with complete specification filing then tentatively your patent application may be considered for examination and by the 54th month you may get the FER. In case, the application is found to be in order for grant, the patent is granted, provided there no pre-grant opposition is filed or pending. A letter patent is issued to the applicant. However, in case a pre-grant opposition is pending, the further action is taken after disposition of the pre-grant opposition.

What is the term for patent in India?
The term of every patent in India is 20 years from the date of filing.

What is complete specification?
Once the patentability of the invention is established after a thorough prior art search, a patent application should be drafted. This document is known as the complete specification.

It must comprise of:
(1) Title of the invention indicating its technical field, (2) Abstract, (3) Prior art and drawings in the prior art (if any), (4) Solution provided by the inventor to obviate the drawbacks of the prior art, (5) A concise but sufficient description of the invention and its usefulness, (6) Details of the best method of its(invention's) working, and (7) Claims

Where do I file my application?
Once the application has been drafted, one needs to file the patent application with the Indian Patent Office in the prescribed format and submit it along with the requisite fees. One can also file their patent application online.

What is a provisional patent application?
A provisional application is an application which can be filed if the invention is still under experimentation stage. Filing a provisional specification provides the advantage to the inventor since it helps in establishing a - priority date of the invention.
